Winchester. This historic, old-fashioned town has not only been made famous from the fact of having been a battle ground of the late war, but the invigorating air and pleasing surroundings have gone toward belping to make it what it is to day, a pleasant summer resort. Winchester is situated on the Valley Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio callroad, half way between Washington and Staunton, Va., and is the county town of Frederick county, Va. People from all parts of the universe seem to flock here during the summer and autumn, and to-day the town is crowded to its utmost capacity with strangers, who find ample accommo-dations and good fare at some of the many boarding houses in and around Winchester. Virginia life is to be seen here in its most delightful phase, and Southern hospitality abounds everywhere. Many of the best families are in reduced circumstances and open their houses for the reception of boarders. The days are cool and pleasant, and sup swiftly by with but little to mark their So BOYS' SUITS, ranging in price from $2.25 fight, and the night steals upon us almost unawates, and then the revelry is supposed to begin. Moonlight picoics, driving parties and germans are the order of antertainment, and the gay little town rings with shouts of laughter and ni is as merry as a marriage bell. He is now a hoary headed old man, and to this day he cannot speak of that trial without evil.cing emotion, but he always ends by saying he thinks Brown deserved his fate. The first Sunday in September I drove, with a party of friends, to an old colonial church, twelve miles from Winchester, in Clarke county, built by the Burrell family. This church is opened for service once a year, and on this occasion there is a great gather and on this occasion there is a great gathering or the clans—the Lees, Burrells, Pages and Brents. The ground was donated by Lord Thomas Fairfax, and in the deed the reservation was made that if ever the church ceased to be a place of worship it was to revert to the family, consequently the people of the neighborhood keep up the custom of having service in it once during the year.

JUDICIAL SALE OF THE FARM CALLED "GOLAN,"
The residence of the late Wm. Gray Somerville, near Mitchell's station, Culpeper co., Va.
By virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Culpeper county, pronounced on the 13th day of September, 1887, in the chancery suit of 'Somerville, substituted trustee, vs. Somerville and others," I, as commissioner of said court, appointed for the purpose by said decree, shall, on the having service in it once during the year. This little "stone chapei" (as it is called) is built after the style of a century ago, with the old high back-pews, the wine glass shaped pulpit, and the sounding board above it. One very peculiar feature of the architecture is the gallery, which to ascend one must go outside and walk around to the back of the building, where the stairs are to be found. One of the early rectors of the church was Bishop Meade, of Virginia, and inside there is a tablet erected to his memory, upon which it states that this church was his first charge, and that in built after the style of a century ago, with after years he always looked to its interest, and in death he expressed the desire to rest in its quiet churchyard, but that it had been deemed best otherwise, and he lies buried in Hollywood Cemetery, Richmond. There is a beautiful cemetery on the outskirts of Winchester, where the ladies of the town have erected four or five monuments to their failen dead. Georgia and Maryland have proved their appreciation of their sons and heroes by two handsome columns. What touched me most of all was the monument to some eight hundred unknown Confederate soldiers, erected principally through the efforts of the ladies of Winchester. The column is about 20 feet high, and on top, standing in bold relief, resting on his gun, is the figure of a Confederate soldier. Beneath the figure, and on every side, is a laurel wreath, and inscribed on the four sides are encomiums of their bravery and courage. About a stone's throw distant lie the Ashby brothers, buried side by side, and towering above them is a substantial tribute to their valor, erected by the women of the South. Gen. Lee is accredited with the remark. when the news was brought to him that Gen. Ashby had fallen, that he felt as if he had lost his two right hands—Ashby and SAD FATE.-A man named Ballard lived in the swamps of the Muckalee with his wife. The woods were full of wild turkeys, and Ballard conceived an idea that he would capture a big lot of them and sell them in Macon. He built a large turkey pen and covered it over, leaving a trench or the fowls to enter, baited it with corn and went home. Two or three days after ne went to the pen and found it full of big fat tarkeys-probably thirty or forty. Bal-lard was afraid to loosen the pen to take them out, so he went home, got a rope and his wife to assist him and returned for the birds. When he got to his pen he crawled in at the trench where the turkeys had en-HARDWARE AND CUTLERY.
